

Publishing in open access journals

(Francesco Chiodelli, University of Turin)

In recent years, several factors have driven the rapid growth of open access journals. Despite this, the academic community still knows little about the universe of open access journals, which is characterised by a high degree of internal diversity. At the same time, the critical debate on the potential and limitations of open access is still in its infancy (although it is growing). Against this background, the workshop will provide a detailed insight into the characteristics of the world of open access journals and propose a critical reflection on the risks of publishing in them, especially for young scholars.
